

Block Prints

The technique of decorating the textiles by hand with the wooden blocks is referred to as block printing. On printing-table the dried cloth is spread and fixed with the help of pins. Marking is done with the help of scale and chalk the areas to be printed, spaces for cutting and stitching. Before printing on the fabric, the printing paste is spread evenly in the wooden tray and the design is stamped on the cloth. Blocks are pressed hard with the fist on the back of the handle to imprint the colour evenly from left to right side; number of colours used in the design defines the number of blocks to be used. Usually borders are printed with the large mango butta and variations of the butti designs.

Printed cloth is dried in shade, sunlight and washed in the river to fix the colours in case of pigment dyes. After drying, the printed cloth is wrapped in plastic or newspapers to avoid the colour spreading.

Upcycled Upholstery

For the upholstery, curtains and bed covers in your room, we rescued the used textiles from the hotel and upcycled it into the handwoven fabric. Through this project, so far, we have upcycled 5 tons of textile waste that saved 100 tonnes of CO2 from entering the atmosphere and generated income for 10 artisan families.

For dhurries, old sarees have been cut into strips, twisted and woven to make beautiful floor covers.
